Transforming Your Everyday Life

June 21-23, 2013 Albuquerque, New Mexico

THE NIGHT SKY- 1ST QUARTER 2013

Mercury: one of the fainter of the planets, Mercury can be viewed in conjunction with the crescent Moon and Mars after sunset on February 10th—11th. Mercury will be in conjunction with Venus in the minutes just before sunrise on March 7th.

Venus: the second-brightest object in the night skies after the Moon, Venus will be a Morningstar at the beginning of the year and can be seen in conjunction with the moon just before sunrise on January 10th. This conjunction will repeat itself again at dawn on February 9th and March 11th.

Mars: the red planet looms low after sunset in the Western horizon throughout the 1st Quarter of 2013. The Moon will conjunct Mars on January 11th, February 10th, and March 12th.

Jupiter: the third brightest object in the heavens will rise in the east before sunset at the start of the year and set below the western horizon around 4:30 a.m.. By the end of March Jupiter will be setting around midnight. The Moon will conjunct Jupiter January 21st, February 18th, and March 17th. The occultation of Jupiter by the Moon on January 21st should be worth bearing the cold to see.

Saturn: will be in the domain of early risers at the beginning of the year, when he ascends in the east around 2 a.m. The Moon can be viewed in conjunction with Saturn in the early morning hours of January 6th—7th, February 2nd—3rd, and March 2nd—3rd Meteor Showers: The Quadrantid meteor shower appears to radiate from the constellation Bootes, near the North Star should be visible on January 4th – 5th. The best time for observations is after midnight, though the waning gibbous Moon will be rising about the same time inhibiting visibility of the shower. .

Daylight Savings Time Begins Sunday March 10th (turn your clocks forward one hour)

ASTROLOGICAL ALMANAC 2013

Have you ever wondered why a restaurant opens and then suddenly goes under? Why fires, accidents, or airplane crashes occur? Why some marriages prosper while others fail? If you contemplate such things then Lynne Palmer's Astrological Almanac for the Year 2013 is the book for you. The Astrological Almanac helps you to plan your activities to your best advantage. Palmer, a Church of Light trained astrologer lists everything from A (Acquisitions) to Y (Yoga) and helps you to determine the right timing for everything from having your hair cut to major surgery or traveling. This is an excellent reference book for the professional and amateur astrologer alike.

"Failing to plan is planning to fail" so get prepared by ordering
The 2013 Astrological Almanac - $26.00 for Domestic Orders including S&H.
